

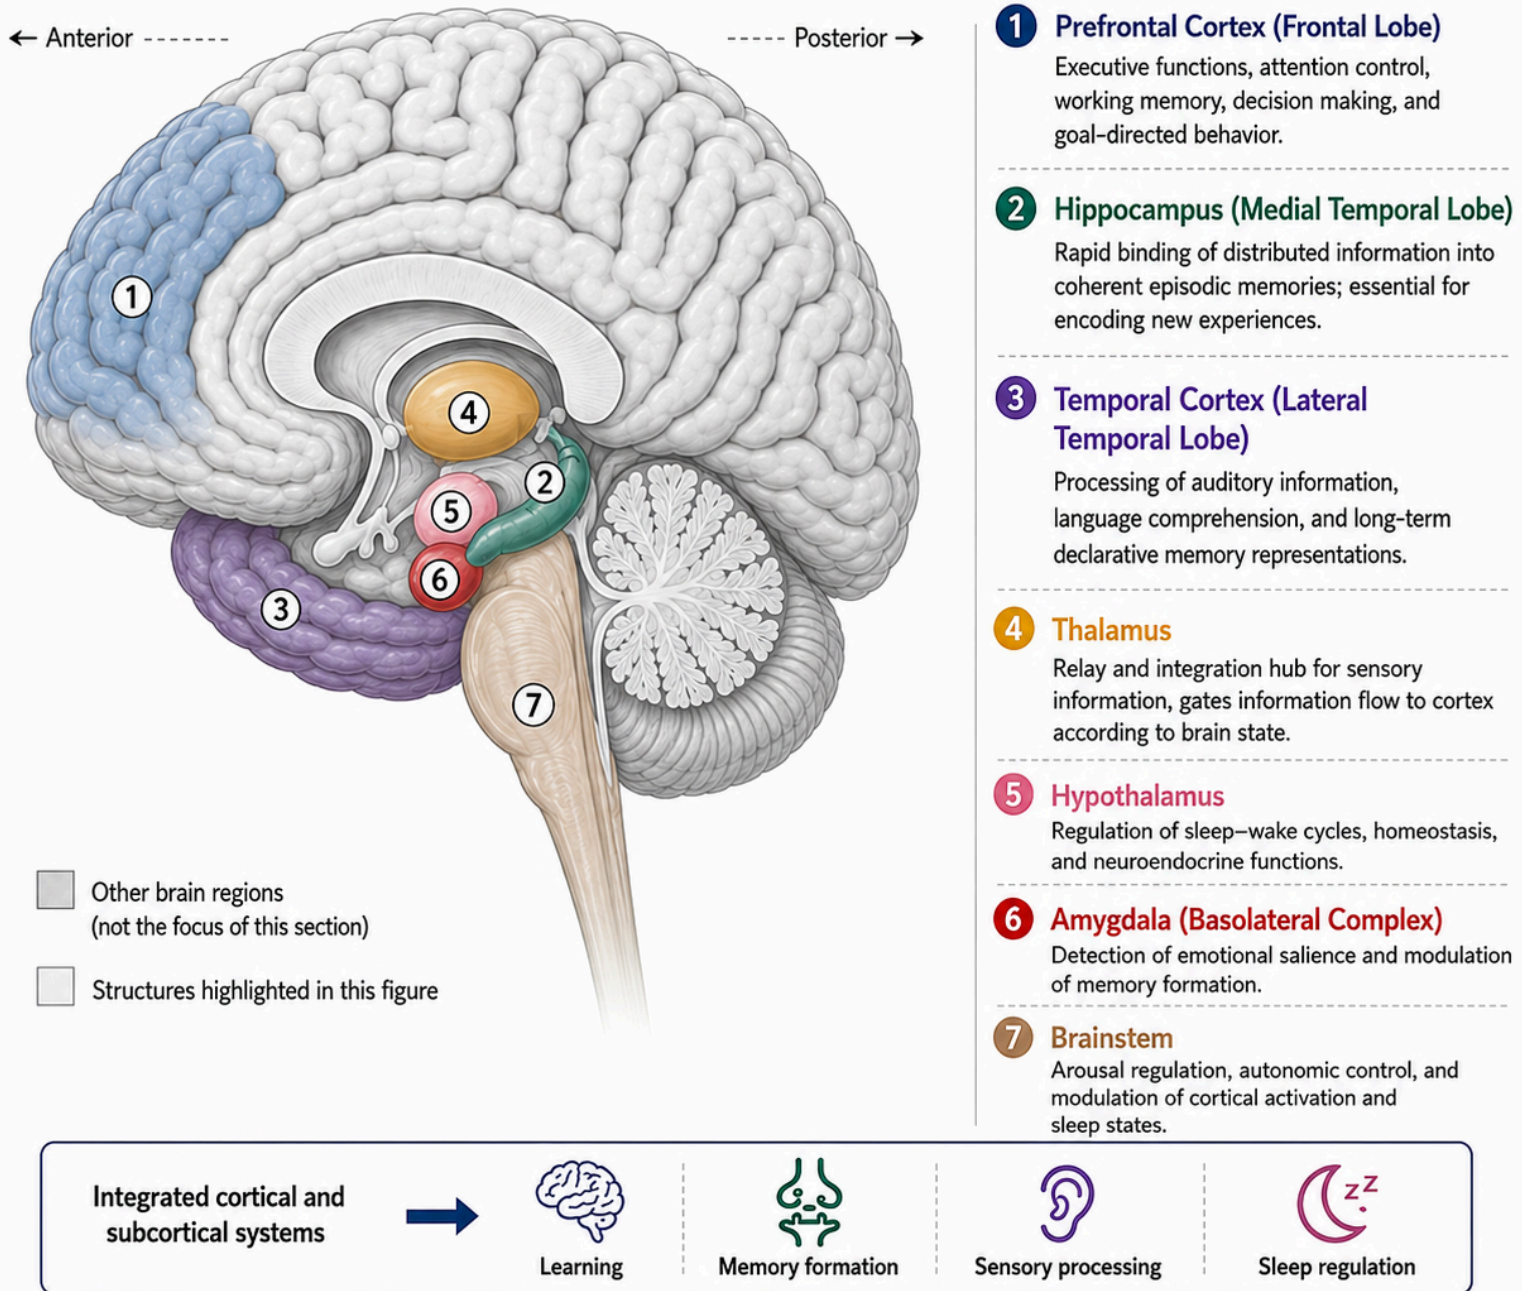

Figure 2. Functional Organization of Brain Systems Supporting Learning, Memory, Sensory Processing, and Sleep Regulation

This figure illustrates the major cortical and subcortical structures that form a distributed network supporting learning, memory, sensory processing, and sleep regulation. These regions do not operate in isolation; rather, they interact dynamically to enable the encoding of experiences, the formation and consolidation of memories, and the regulation of behavioral state.